

Networks in Society

Networks are ubiquitous in natural and societal systems. Especially in the context of the ongoing sustainability transformation these systems and their networks will have to adapt to new roles and stresses. Understanding these complex systems is an ongoing challenge. We present our work on modeling, studying and designing such networks and networked systems for two systems that will have to undergo dramatic changes: mobility and energy.